Myrtle, the four year old daughter of Alfred Hartzell, a hired hand, was playing in the barn, when she had her leg cut off by the knife of a machine which was being operated by the child's father.

The parent of the child was assisting his father, John Hartzell, in the harvesting oats, and the little tot went in the field to see her father. While she was adjusting part of the machine the child ran to the front and came to the cutting bar. The father warned his daughter to go from the machine, but when the machine started on was too late, the danger instead of away from it.

The baby was hurried to the house and a telephone was resorted to in calling a physician but would not arrive. A farm hand then rode to Newville as fast as a horse could carry him, but the physician was attended the little child. A few hours later the little one died from the loss of blood.

Lallock had been trampled upon by one of the horses and had lost a number of his teeth. All were very badly shaken up and bruised but are expected to recover.

WITNESS FEES ARE REDUCED

Superior Court Affirms Decision of Judge Swope and Town Witnesses will Receive only Fifty Cents a Day.

The Superior Court of Pennsylvania has affirmed the decision of President Judge S. McC. Swope which was rendered February 15, 1916, and which fixes the witness fees in Adams County at $1.00 per day and mileage for those from the country and 50 cents per day for those living within a mile of the county seat.

The case was one of the suit of Flemming and Bair against R. P. Rice, treasurer of the State Workmen's Insured Railroad Company for damages. Charles H. Stonesifer, Esq., acted for the railroad, made an appeal from the bill of costs for witnesses fees and Judge Swope sustained the appeal.

When the case was argued before Judge Swope Mr. Stonesifer contended that the act of 1907, a general act by the legislature of Pennsylvania, fixing the fees of witnesses at $1.50 per diem and mileage to Adams County and did not repeal the local act of 1868 which fixed the per diem fee at 50 cents as $1.50 except those who reside within a mile of the county seat for which the fee is fifty cents per day.

The local act of 1868 applies to the counties of Franklin, Armstrong, Lycoming and Clinton and Judge Swope's decision was in line with decisions similar cases in Beaver, Lancaster and other counties in the state.

W. C. Sheely, Esq., attorney for Flemming and Bair, appealed the case to the Superior Court which sustained the decision of the local Court and then established the fees of witnesses in Adams County in the future as 50 cents per day for those living in Gettysburg and within a mile of the town and $1.00 per day and mileage for all others.

THIRD ACCIDENT DEATH

Thomas L. Goodrich, a passenger conductor on the Pennsylvania railroad, died suddenly Monday morning at 8 1-2 o'clock at the Columbia hospital from injuries received on Sunday, July 17, when a car overturned against near Watt's station. Mr. Goodrich was running a train for a number of soldiers from the Gettysburg encampment. This was the third fatal death from the accident; Brakeman Blaine was killed instantly and Fireman Ettinger died several hours afterward.

It was thought that Conductor Goodrich was the least injured of the four men who were down with the engine, the fireman being fatally hurt. He was in improving nicely at his home in Harrisburg. His condition was such that it was believed he would be able to be about in a few days. It was only for the past three days he was able to sit about the institution in a wheel chair.

Monday morning he arose early and after receiving his bath seated himself in the rolling chair. He suddenly complained of being short of breath and died in a few minutes.

The engine which upset at the time of the accident was being sent from Harrisburg to Columbia, from where it was to bear a train of soldiers that had been brought in over the Reading branch from Gettysburg. The men were of the crew were called to Harrisburg and when it reached the curve near Watt's station it was running too fast to keep on the rails and upset.

Brakeman Blaine and Fireman Ettinger were buried Saturday afternoon while the engineer and conductor escaped by jumping.

MAD COW GETS AFTER CHICKENS

West End Farmer Has Fine Time when Develops Rabies and Runs from the Mansion. Supposed to have been bitten by Dog.

A pet cow belonging to Peter Ambaugh, who lives near Willow Grove on the Carlisle pike, became mad, went violently mad on Saturday and after butting various objects and attacking the members of the family, was shot, captured and tied. Dying Saturday night, the animal is the first to receive considerable stir in the neighborhood.

Saturday morning the cow was first noticed when the animal which followed Mr. Ambaugh to the farm started to run from him when he would catch. The cow was stirred up about a fertile butting into treetand various objects and could then continue. It was tampered where it attached the chicken sex. The animal then started to bellow and would run with its head for a great distance. It was at this stage that Mr. Ambaugh captured it.

Sunday morning Dr. Moriarty, local veterinarian and the State Livestock Sanitary Board, was sent for and when he arrived at the farm he pronounced the animal dead. After an examination he pronounced rabies as the cause of the animal's death and ordered that all of the other cattle about the farm be given the proper treatment.

It is thought that the cow was bitten by a dog which passed through that section of the country. Saturday night the cow was killed near Carlstown as that time it was in a violent rage. It is the first case for rabies to develop in cattle in the county and is supposed that it was stricken by the dog.

In answer to a query of a reader of these notes living at Dover, Del., which is to the effect that in a recent issue mentioned, the writer would say that the Dover mentioned was not in the title "Farm, Orchard and Garden," but simply conveyed the contents of a weekly essay which appear in many news and agricultural papers over the country. The matter is put in narrative form by the Rural Publishing Press Association of 44 Park place, New York City, and is sent out to subscribers. The writer has no connection therewith, but considers it a very interesting line of literature to read. ### RAIN IS GREATLY NEEDED

The continued dry weather is seriously affecting the crops throughout this section. Of course corn and late potatoes are the principal ones suffering. Following the cold wet weather of last spring, which held back greatly the growth of the corn, came a warm spell, with plenty of rain. During this time corn made rapid growth and prospects were for an unusually good crop. The dry weather is now telling and corn is just standing still or is tassel and the ears to shoot. It is the time that a rain is most fully needed.

Pasture fields are also showing great need of rain, and all kinds of garden truck is suffering.

The will be Mr. Wellington's final production here this season, and it is expected that it will eclipse any previous effort. For the part the director has had three rehearsals a day for a week and the Times said: "I have never had a cast and chorus that took more pains to make it the best possible out of their parts."

It may be said too, that Mr. Wellington has never taken for the work a single production—save in building the Gettysburg audience, and so enthusiastic are the people of Gettysburg over the production of "Robin Hood" which he will present next season.

The stage setting for the "Roof Garden by Night," will be unique in the extreme. There will be a rustic garden, with palms and flowers, shaded lights, Japanese lanterns and other smart young men at tables.

Cousinly Kisses

By Dr. MURIEL E. GRAY

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"I'm looking," said an elderly lady in glasses and a cap, and a short curly of that size of her face, "for a suitable kiss for my niece."

The back door of the college dormitory and here with a pretty young girl in a blue gingham dress. She was standing in a young man who was looking down at her with a smile and was about to descend the staircase.

"Why, Aunt Elizabeth!" the young girl said in college.

"Your Aunt Elizabeth."

"Your cousins, Rose and Ethel."

"Well, well! Is delightful."

The young man put his arms around the old lady's shoulders in a happy embrace and kissed her back between both cheeks. Then he kissed Rose on the cheek. Lastly he kissed Rose—on the cheek.

"When 6:34 you come down, Aunt Jane's cards?" asked Elizabeth.

We reached here this morning. We're waiting for a long while to see the college, and your mother went after a car to take us there. Let me see—how many years since we met? Why, Rose, you're a young lady, you were then a little boy with curls. How old are you?

"Rose and I were playmates, I believe."

At the remembrance he gave Rose another kiss.

"Oh, no, you weren't," said the old lady. "You were a little boy and Rose was, and that summer Rose was obliged to wear curls. Mary Jane braided them finely for her health. You're never to forget that."

"Never saw her before! Well, if this is the effect I'm sure it won't be the last."

And he kissed her again.

At that moment the real Edward H. Bream, Jr., came down the path with Gertrude Dow chatting with an old lady. The young man saw the kissing worthily at the latter. Indis exceed. Then he turned to his companion and Smith and whispered:

"Some old aunt and cousins of Rose's. Haven't met her for you. If you give me away I'll murder you."

"Yes, leading Smith up to the ladies, "Miss Dow."

The old lady in the darkest face, but will be very glad to assist me in showing Miss Dow the college and also college your step pleasure."

"Trouble is very good fellow," Dale announced to the party, thus to a kiss on the cheek. Then he gave Rose his close seat to snogather the most affectionate kiss of all.

"See here, Gerti—I mean Ned—you have to kiss me, too, for I'm your wife. What I do if I do is pure mercy."

"Why, Aunt Elizabeth!" Rose exclaimed the old lady.

"Why, I thought nodesty on the brain. Besides, he strikes so hard he doesn't know his own strength. Kiss me."

The young men walked about with the girls for a while. Then Rose called them into the different buildings and showing them the various departments. There was to be a "prom" in the evening, and the young men were invited to sit around it with them. They asked Rose to dance with them and she called them "cousin."

Finally it was time to go. Rose and Ethel and Dale and Smith and Dow stood on the front steps and the old ladies and gentlemen were in the carriage. Rose looked at her cousins and so hard here that we have no time for kissing. Shall we give it up until next year?"

"Only I heard of a case once where some ladies went to a college to meet their nephews. Each one was the son of the student patient himself off for the day. Then he said to her:

"That couldn't have been at this college. For we have no girls in the town who would get the good cut."

The girls looked at themselves during the evening and on returning to their hotel had gained the impression that they had escorted them. After being kissed by their cousins the young men were about to withdraw Dale and Smith stepped forward to do the same. Each gave Rose a prolonged smack and then each kissed the other girl, Dale saying to Ethel:

"When do I come in?" he asked in a low voice. "I haven't received the equanimity of his chum lest he should see his wife."

"Oh, you'll come in on the way home," said Ethel, encouragingly to the young man.

"No, you won't," growled Keith, "I don't sell my birthright for a mess of pottage." Then Ethel and Rose, who had little has been putting up a job on Dale of kiss-and-run, came in for a generous consolation.

Rose, Rose and Cousin Ethel," put in Dale, "he's doing this simply to get a kiss. It's the weakest"—

The girls laughed and, both springing forward, threw their arms around Smith's neck and gave him a kiss on each cheek.

They had known of the imposition all the while. But not so their fondest, and they didn't tell her.

SALT NECESSARY FOR THE FLOCK.

Stock.

Keep an abundance of salt where it is accessible to the animals for the digestive juices of the stomach. It is the transportation from the digestive tract into the blood vessels the alimentary canal. Salt is also a tonic and aids in the density of the blood and gives to a degree the activity of the cells of the body. No stamp can do the best results enough salt.

Salting every few days is sufficient for most animals, but it is better to eat as good a method as keeping salt before the animals at all times. Salt is a rush of work comes or a visitor, and the animals will not be delayed in the things neglected. When salt is given after a rush of work, the animals are so eager for it that they will eat too much and indigestion or water are needed to wash out the surplus of the body. Salt is also useful from the tissues of the body to the removal of the ash waste.

Rock salt is preferred by some in the places since it will last for a long time, salt, which serves a double purpose in keeping the animals well and also aids in preventing worms. What it is desired to kill worms in the flock or weeds, as Canada thistles, the sheep will eat the salt more readily if they are then gnawed down to the ground and occasionally fed salt.

However, the men who sown his salt on the land and then feed the salt requisite of a good shepherd need not fear the consequences. The salt will be done without fell, just as a good shepherd will not allow his flock to go out of the sheep. Watchfulness is the price of success in sheep husbandry and he sees many things that need doing that the careless man does not see.

Worms in the Pigs.

When the young pigs get worms they are hard to get rid of. Sometimes farmers then until relieved of the matter. Dr. Salt recommends that the pigs be fed in milk to pigs in a sore. Add to the milk one teaspoonful of salt to every 250 pounds of a weight. The treatment may be continued for three days and may be more beneficial if the salt is added to the milk after it has started it with them. They should be fed in this way for three consecutive days.

Dr. Salt says that "Pigs and sows should be kept in clean pens and fed on clean food. Disease germs may be carried in the hair and by means many things that seem the most innocent to human eyes and noses.

DAIRY NOTES.

Dairyman Should Be Prepared.

The dairy man should always be ready for any accident that may occur. With her first calf the young cow often has a hard time of it and should be ever the trouble may be should be ready to help her.

The Holland Dairyman.

The cow is the mainstay of the dairyman's house. But don't imagine the Holland dairyman is a cow man. He is at best no more sitting room. It is the cow's home, and there she is fed, is covered with matting and the wife and children sleep with her.

The Cow Without Horns.

A dairy cow is more profitable if she has not been given the horns of nature. Horns are a dangerous weapon, but it is not as good a method as keeping cattle without the horns. They are also a menace to each other. Many are injured by cattle with horns. Many are killed by them. Many are injured by them. Many are killed by them. Many are injured by them. Many are killed by them. Many are injured by them

NAMES BERRY FOR GOVERNOR

Keystone Party Nominates a State Ticket.

PLATFORM RAPS BOSSES

Short Ballot and Revision of Charter Also System Among Other Planks Advocated—Conventions Was Stormy.

William H. Berry, of Chester, former state treasurer, swept the convention of the new Keystone (third) party in Philadelphia and headed the gubernatorial nominative by a lead of 10 votes over his nearest competitor.

The first ballot showed a total of 56 votes for Berry, 46 for Joseph Hackenberg, of Philadelphia, and 22 for George W. Guthrie, former mayor of Pittsburg. There were 177 delegates present, representing 81 counties.

D. Clarence Gibboney was nominated for lieutenant governor; John J. Casey, of White-Berry, for secretary of internal affairs, and Thomas B. Scully, of Pittsburg, for state treasurer.

Mr. Berry later appeared before the convention and, after a few minutes' outburst of enthusiasm had extended promised the Keystone party that if the state from end to end that there should be no "bosses" and no control upon him and predicted that the end of the boulder had come in Pennsylvania.

The trouble, which was local in Witherspoon hall, Juniper and Walnut streets, lasted from early in the morning until late at night. From the first top of the gavel, when John G. Brooks, former state treasurer and chairman of the temporary organization committee of the new party, called the delegates to order until the final ballot in the early hours, the convention hall was a confusion scene of shouting and tumult. Partisans without number fought valiantly for their own individual interests, and several times the arguments became so heated and personal that only the cool headedness of a few of the leaders saved the assemblage from a stampede.

Roosevelt vs. Bryan.

The most serious clash came late in the afternoon, when Frank Riter, of this city, introduced a resolution indorsing Theodore Roosevelt. This was immediately a division of the delegates along party lines, and there were shouts from all corners of the room of "Why not Bryan?" "Where's Bryan?" and other questions to which the chairman, with the constant pounding of the gavel was lost in the uproar. Finally Henry C. Niles, of York, chairman, succeeded in preventing open hostilities, and the resolution was laid on the table amid the hisses and jeers directed at Mr. Riter.

The platform, in brief, is as follows:

Vigorous denunciation of the Republican and Democratic state bosses.

Condemnation of "boss rule," and assertion that both old parties have had platforms were "dictated by the same authority" and both made to the interests of the liquor business.

Abolition of party emblems and adoption of short ballot.

Civil service laws to apply to every employe in the purely administrative service of the public.

Local option to govern the sale of intoxicating liquor.

Standardization of the public school system.

Election of United States senators by popular vote.

Revision of the tax laws and exemption of all taxes on improvements.

Creation of a public service commission.

Regulation and improvement of the labor judiciary, including administration with due process in the law.

Just and liberal appropriations for charitable purposes, but vesting supervision of the system and receipts of appropriations in proper courts.

HARDING NAMED FOR GOVERNOR

Taft and Garfield Forces Bad Boss Cox in Ohio.

WAS FORCED WITH LINE

The Republican nominees for governor of Ohio in November, 1912, Judge of Marion, ex-lieutenant governor.

Despite the strenuous efforts made by Senator Dick's Cox campaign committee to defeat Harding, the Republican state convention at Columbus by a vote of 1,000 to 1,000 nominated the Marion man on the first ballot. Harding, a resident of Dayton, a combination of the "progressives" with the national administration men, broke up the fight on the first ballot.

Theo Cox, yielding to the inevitable, withdrew Governor Judson Harmon, Harding, and that finished it.

The nomination of Harding still was a joke. The withdrawal of James R. Garfield and Charles P. Taft, however, for the beginning of the vote brought about a Garfield-administration combination that twenty-four hours before would have made Cox's nomination impossible. At the Garfield votes, and the Taft votes, the delegates saw at a few that clung to the undeveloped strength of Lieutenant Governor Hyde, the latter, were cast for Harding.

The ballot was: Harding, 731; Brown, 126, and Longworth, 115. John R. Thomas, of Cincinnati, was reciplents of surprise ballots, who had been cast for Harding, and who refused to do vote between them.

Harding's speech of acceptance was made unanimous.

For state treasurer, Rudy A. Archer, of Columbus; for secretary of state, Glenn of Steubenville, by a vote of 1,000 to 1,000.

U. O. Denman, of Toledo, was nominated for attorney general by acclamation.

The debate of Cox and the unqualified endorsement of the administration of President Taft in his own state, and of Secretary of State Knox, together with beating Harmon, the Democratic governor, by the Republicans, is regarded as the first presidential opponent.

Praises the achievements of his administration, which are declared to be the most important in the history of national legislation. Among these are conservation of forests and waters.

The successful prosecution of trusts declared.

Enforcement of law against illegal issues in corporations.

Economy in expenditures.

Withdrawal of public funds from private entry.

Defends the Payne tariff law as in accordance with the Republican doctrine of protecting home industries, says the law has been unjustly assailed.

Lauds the railroad law as another achievement of the present national administration.

Endorses the principle of conservation of natural resources and the efforts of congress and the president along this line.

GETTYSBURG BOY WRITES OF TRIP

Charles Lott Writes to His Mother of Big Celebration in South America in which he Took Part. An Interesting Letter.

Charles Lott, of this place, who is with the United States ship South Dakota, writes interestingly of a recent trip to Buenos Aires, Argentina, to witness the centennial celebration in that city. He says:

The parade was a grand success as there were ships there from nearly every country and the foreign element of the parade was made up of officers and marines from ships of the United States, France, Germany, Australia Spain, Portugal, Holland, Italy, Japan, and Brazil.

The United States had the honor of leading the parade and our battalion of marines led the way, followed by our sailors. We were cheered all along the route and our boys made a fine showing even though we did not wear as many fancy uniforms as the men of the Latin races as most of them were full dress and we wore our every day neat service uniform.

After all the foreign troops had passed, all the Argentine forces passed in review, and as that took several hours, we were then dismissed and had in time to see most of the rest of the parade.

I enjoyed myself immensely during the six days that we were there. We attended the field sports, boat races, horse races, bull fights at the Plaza Hotel and a number of other functions they had in connection with their centennial celebrations. I was right seeing all over the city and it is one of the most beautiful cities that I have ever seen. Their decorations for this celebration was the finest that could be ever seen anywhere and were much more elaborate than we have had in some of our big cities. Their electrical display at night is almost like an entire city were the most wonderful that has ever been equipped and it was very successful. There are many fine streets in the city and also fine modern buildings, and at different parts of the city there are parks and one park which are beautifully kept with walks, lawns, flower beds, shady seats and playing fields for all. It is a pity that some of our cities could not have copied after the Latin races as to that respect and had some of their decoration such as the centennial had in some parts of our cities.

The prevailing language there was of course Spanish as that is the language spoken by all of those South American countries.

I attended a banquet there that was given by the American Government to the chief non commissioned officers of all foreign nations at a grand dining table with about 150 men from all the different nations. Each gentleman were given by every nation and the band played the national air of every nation represented there. It was quite an experience and one that one does not often have.

CONSTRUCTION OF BRICK HIGHWAYS

They Are Durable If Properly Put Together

PREPARING CEMENT FILLER.

After Road is Completed it Should Be Rolled Thoroughly With a Roller Weighing Not Less Than Three Nor More Than Five Tons—Lay Blocks on Clean, Hard Sand Cushion.

Roadways of brick, if properly constructed, will prove to be lasting highways built of any other material. A good cushion for one contemplating the construction of brick roads to follow is one used by road experts during a recent experimentation, which is as follows:

All bricks should be strictly pavers of the size commercially known as block, the widths of which should not vary more than one-eighth of an inch. They should be thoroughly annealed, tough and durable, regular in size, shape and evenly burned.

(From Good Roads Magazine, New York.)

When brick on the block should show a dense smoothly body, uniform in color inside, free from warps of any kind, free, also, of cracks, cracks of normal contraction due to burning, or surface cracks must not exceed one-fortieth of an inch in depth or width.

All blocks so distorted in burning as to lay unevenly in the paved roadway be rejected.

All brick should be tested for absorption and strength, the limits of loss by absorption and strength under absorption to be determined by the engineer in charge of the work.

The filler should be composed of one part cement and three parts of clean, dry portland cement. The sand should be free. The mixture of cement according to their bushel of the sand, together with 10 per cent of hydrated lime, should be mixed in the box and mixed dry until the mixture assumes an even color without any shade. Then water should be added and the mixture turned over until the mortar of this cream.

The surface edges of the brick should be thoroughly wet before the filler is applied by being sprayed with hose.

The mixture must be removed from the box to the street surface with a hoe, shovel, and the width of space strewed in the box as the same is being thus removed. Care for the purpose should be taken to avoid loss of the filler. The filler should be free to flow and to work into the joints of the brick, so that the mixture will readily flow to the corner of the box, the bottom of which should be on the surface above the pavement. This will prevent the mixture from crowding the brick should be thoroughly swept into the joints.

Two such boxes should be provided to every street and be in front of or next to traffic, spreading twenty feet in each direction from the point of delivery.

The work of filling should then be finished by the use of a hose, and a coating of cement in liquid form but not a thick paste—a fine coat of cement and sand—should be turned back and forth with a broom, so that the mixture will be made the proportion between the joints.

Within one-half to three-quarters of an hour after the work is laid over and the grout between the joints has settled to within one inch of the top, filling place the whole surface must be carefully sprinkled with water and allowed to remain for the space of two days. The surface must not be disturbed by traffic for two or three days.

After brick in pavements are bonded and the surface is swept clean the roadway should be rolled with a roller of roller weighing not less than three nor more than five tons.

SAVED

By T. DeWITT BOWMAN

Farmer Insley was tossing about in bed valley trying to sleep. At last he arose, went to the window and looked out. The moon was at the full, illuminating everything in sight—among the undulating hills, scattered dwellings and the surrounding forests more than 200 years old. Suddenly Insley turned his eyes wider than they had been when peering out of the window. A bright passed across one of the windows of the house. He rubbed his eyes a bit closer, opened it and stood looking out. All was still. Then the light appeared again by the moon. Not a living creature was in sight.

The light appeared again. This time it was nearer. Insley's heart beat faster, then seemed to have been extinguished—it fairly stopped. Then it began to pound as fast as its true wound energy into the cherry. As he proceeded to the thought that he had better see than he went. He knew the room well and felt confident that he could enter by a basement window. He cast a long shadow on his approach. Finding the window, he arrived at the sash and ungotted by sufficient light from without to enable him to see that no one occupied a staircase leading up into the vestibule. Gaining a door at the top of it he found enable him to peep into the body of the house a few moments. Then he

Two men were standing by a safe door, the door standing open in their faces. The one was young and of city appearance. The other was older and one by moonlight alone. The other was in the act of opening the safe door. The two were talking, but in order not to hear what was said, Insley and again the younger man would take out his watch and look at it from time to time impatiently.

Then Insley heard a knock at the church door. The men heard it, too, for they ceased talking and looked out of the church. The watcher, then let the door close. The younger rushed forward, but not as far that he could not reach the door in time to turn the knob. The young man opened the door and the two men went outside. There was a short wait for him to see by, but he could hear:

"Searchlight," said the watcher, "has been tampered with."

"I know," said the other. "I had to."

Insley knew that a marriage service was about to be performed. The watcher was the minister, and the other was about to suffer a terrible fate. Insley felt that he had rescued the romantic age when one stranger's life was held as nothing and well. In opposition to their parents' wishes that child had married a man above the marriage without being informed of his character. Consequently he was getting made him scamstress. The pastor of the church had been called to a case where this one was of medium height and strength. Insley was a man of nerve, a powerful man, and he felt that he was equal to midnight call if he could use muscle to advantage. The question was which to read the marriage service.

Then a sudden inspiration came and he began. Insley could hear every word that was spoken in the church, but he had night to see why the two stood there and worked together in workout to pay said accurately.

"I forbid it."

At the same time he dropped down into the pew. He did not know that opposition his words produced, but he heard a woman's voice say that they were indistinguishable sounds and a murmur.

"Who is your father?"

"Daniel Dunbar. He was his own daughter!

She came to herself, and by the light she saw him gazing down upon her with an expression of surprise and pain.

"Father!"

"Daniel!"

"Is it a dream?"

"No, dear heart, not a dream, but a reality. Have you run from home to my poor mother—can we love to save you."

He carried her home in his arms. It was the old story of a villain from the city coming by a most marriage to and a simple country girl.

War Department Orders Immediate Return of Command having Horses Suffering from Forage Poisoning. Three More Killed.

The Fifteenth United States Cavalry detachment consisting of Troops A, B and D left Tuesday afternoon for Fort Myer, Virginia. This action was the outcome of forage poisoning which appeared among the horses of the command. Three more animals were killed. The men are making a total of seventeen in all.

The troops left here for Fort Myer by rail come from the War Department at Washington on Monday afternoon and the orders were received by headquarters by Colonel Joseph Garrard, of the Virginia. The men are all strong on account of contagious diseases cases. Word by Lieutenant and others. It was feared suitable camp sites could not be found here if the first mule march were to be taken and in addition it was not felt that the horses were in condition to make such a trip

The decision to not remained as before was considered by authorities but nevertheless there has been a great deal of sickness among the horses of the command. Three have died at camp Gettysburg, two in the Fifteenth Cavalry, two mules in the Quartermaster's Department and one horse in the Second New Jersey troop. Several bales of hay which appeared all right at first have been nearly are said to have caused the trouble.

For various reasons I shall not give the right name of the multimillionaire who hired these two picked clubs from the National and American leagues to play an exhibition game. My particular reason is that the said millionaire is something only known to himself and to the players who composed the two teams. I would never such knowledge to the public of American "fandom" as yesterday to reputable him. Think of 10-cent-ers, with hitters and fielders like Wagner, Mike Mitchell, Hans Lobert or Tommy Leach, Wilbur Wood, he-hued by Ty Cobb, Tris Speaker, Oscar Stanage and Eddie Collins' and only two "fans" to watch the battle!

Using the term reverently, you could not call either of these men a "fan." The correct word is "rooter" for the baseball "fan" in metropolitan primarily. He follows the "drive" on power and may even cover a ball a ball park. As a matter of fact, I understand that another "fan," Evers and Merritt used, by the way, that to the great disgust of the "fans" and the true grandeur of baseball, have been "fanned" by Johnson, Pitcher, Herbaugh and was a player in name only. He could not keep a minute record of every important ball player's work.

Despite his vast wealth, the millionaire had small opportunity to display his astonishing baseball lore because shame had made him never set foot in

GAME ENDS IN DISPUTE

At the Adams County Home baseball picnic at Island Grove Park, Bullfrog Springs, on Thursday the Gettysburg Y. M. C. A. team scored hats with the Arendtsville Athletic club played an interesting and well played game of base ball which ended in the bitter half of the ninth inning when Gettysburg forfeited to Arendtsville on account of a disputed decision.

The score was 6 to 5 in favor of the Arendtsville team when Umpire Bittner sent up for Gettysburg, was called out when he attempted to steal second. Oyler slid for the base and was clearly safe but when he half had the base was knocked away by his slide and he was declared out though he was standing on the place at which the base had been. Gettysburg claimed that a rule made before the game allowed a man under such conditions to be safe but Ballengerger, the umpire, would not see things that way and Manager Stoufer took his team off of the field.

C. Ballengerger started to pitch for Arendtsville but four hits and two runs were made in the first two innings and Paul Reinecker was put in and the Gettysburg batters at his mercy for several innings. Oyler was then found him and only the fast work of the Arendtsville fielders prevented more scoring.

Gettysburg's entire team fielded well. McDonnell and Sachs having unusual success with Reinecker's batting was the real feature having twelve hits, five of which were for extra bases. The game was well played and a large crowd was disappointed at the unfortunate ending.

NIGHT FIGHT DRAWS CROWD

Battle in the Darkness Takes People to Country East of Town. Searchlights Play Prominent Part in Battle.

The first night sham battle of the Camp of Instruction took place along the Bonneauville road about a half miles east of town on Thursday evening when the First and Third with which a large force of Home attached. The affair was witnessed by a large number of people from town.

The Second army, which consisted of only one regiment of infantry, but the three top searchlights with which they were equipped, was entire country for several miles in front of their line of defense. The Blues marched toward the Red line from a point about a mile and a half east and by getting to shelter ravines, hiding in corn fields and in underbrush managed to get comparatively near without being discovered by the rays of the powerful search lights.

The defensive army had a complete system of telephone service with which all parts of the army were kept in touch with the movements of the Blues. The main telephone station was established at headquarters in the front of the hill and the movements of the Blues were known most of the time.

The attacking army used their artillery and the flashes of the powder made the only spectacular part of the entire maneuver. There was very little infantry fire, the attacking force being supposed to be charging with fixed bayonets and the defending force not firing until they were within close range at hand.

The maneuver lasted for several hours and proved rather disappointing to the people who had gone to the place hoping to see some thrilling charges.

The "recall" was sounded before the Blue force got within several hundred yards of the hill, the umpires judging that there had been sufficient work.
